PROFILE OF MEMBER:

David Challis is Professor of Community Care Research and Director of the PSSRU at the University of Manchester. PSSRU is a major centre in the UK focussing on research in long term and social care. He has undertaken the development and evaluation of a series of studies of community based care for older people which provided alternatives to hospital and nursing home care and influenced policy development both in the UK and internationally. He has undertaken national studies of care coordination in older people's and long term conditions services and evaluation of assessment procedures in England. Other work includes performance measurement in older people's services, hospital discharge, the evaluation of innovative approaches to flexible support such as personal budgets and a range of studies in old age mental health services. Current includes: Home Support in Dementia Care; European variations in access to care and support for people with dementia; and dementia diagnosis in minority ethnic elders. He is the author of 21 books and some 200 papers. Books include Supporting People with Dementia at Home (Ashgate, 2009). He is Associate Director of the NIHR School for Social Care Research and an NIHR Senior Investigator.

He has been an adviser on services for older people to the Commonwealth Government of Australia, Canadian Province of Ontario, Government of Japan, Government of Hong Kong, the US State Government of Wisconsin, the Department of Health in England and the National Assembly for Wales.
